

Eternal rest without hassle about safety matters?

Dear employee,

All too often we hear about excuses for not wearing your personal protective equipment: too warm, too cold, it itches or hinders you, makes you look like a fool, etc.

Not using your personal protective equipment is a choice you are free to make , but are you considering the consequences of your choice too?

Let us take gas detection as an example. It happens all too often that people enter silos and manholes without a detector. The most frequently used excuses are "It'll only take a minute", "I'm strong enough", "If anything's wrong, I come straight out again" or simply "The battery is flat".

To return without completing the job because you've forgotten your detector, may result in a lost hour of work. But if you decide to quickly enter anyway, it may result in a lost life.

In fact, choosing not to put on your protective equipment is choosing to put up with the consequences.

If you consider things from this point of view, we guess you won't need long to make the right choice.

But the choice is yours.

Kind regards,

The board

Or rather use gas detection equipment?

vandeputte
SAFETY EXPERTS

Find out more at www.vdp.com